

The Afghanistan War: Diverse Voices and Viewpoints

Bing West's Home Page, <http://www.bingwest.com/>

Bing West served as assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs in the Reagan administration. Bing was a combat Marine in Việt Nam, authored the counterinsurgency classic, The Village, and has been on hundreds of patrols in Afghanistan, Iraq, and Việt Nam. He has published widely on the war in numerous periodicals and journals, including Foreign Affairs and The Wall Street Journal. West is a leading critique of the Pentagon's Afghanistan war policies. (Thanks to Peter Frost for this contribution.)

Fotini Christia, "Letter from Kabul: Fear and Abandonment in Afghanistan," Foreign Affairs, Council on Foreign Relations, June 26, 2011. Christia, an MIT assistant professor and a member of the MIT Security Studies Program, contrasts the Obama administration's claim that the Afghans will soon be "ready to stand on their own" with the vulnerability many citizens of that country feel in light of a potential quick American withdrawal, <http://www.fam.ag/7P1Vd9>.

Lone Survivor: The Eyewitness Account of Operation Redwing and the Lost Heroes of Seal Team Ten

BY MARCUS LUTTRELL WITH PATRICK ROBINSON

LITTLE, BROWN AND COMPANY, 2007

208 PAGES, ISBN: 978-0316067591, PAPERBACK

This national best-seller, written by a Navy Seal, is the story of an attempt by four Seals in June 2005 to capture or kill a major al-Qaeda leader near the Pakistan border. The author, who is now a frequent guest on national media, also has established the Lone Survivor Foundation to honor and remember American military, <http://www.lonesurvivorfoundation.org/>.

Max Boot's Website, <http://www.maxboot.net/>

Max Boot, a military historian and foreign policy analyst, is the Jeane J. Kilpatrick Senior Fellow in National Security Studies at the Council on Foreign Relations. He has advised American military commanders, and he is a contributor to a number of publications including Commentary, The New York Times, and The Weekly Standard. Boot considers the Afghanistan war to be winnable by coalition forces.

The Wars in Afghanistan: Messianic Terrorism, Tribal Conflicts, and the Failures of the Great Powers

BY PETER TOMSEN

PUBLIC AFFAIRS, 2011

912 PAGES, 978-1586487638, HARDCOVER

The author, former ambassador, and special envoy on Afghanistan from 1989 to 1992 has dealt with a variety of Afghan political, military, and religious leaders. Reviewers in liberal and conservative publications in both the US and abroad have praised his book. Tomsen's basic argument is that American policymakers still do not understand Afghanistan.

Welcome to Afghanistan: Send More Ammo

BY BENJAMIN TUPPER

EPIGRAPH PUBLISHING, 2009

208 PAGES, ISBN: 978-0982525500, PAPERBACK

The author served as one member of a two-man Embedded Training team with the Afghan army fighting the Taliban in a remote part of Afghanistan. His dispatches were broadcast on NPR, and his book has been described by a wide variety of readers, including parents of soldiers and veterans, as humorous, thought-provoking, multifaceted, and eloquent. (Thanks to Mike Breakey for this contribution.) ■

The Taliban, Women, and Human Rights

The Taliban took control of Afghanistan's government in 1996 and ruled until it was driven from power during the 2001 US-led invasion. The Taliban provided safe haven to al-Qaeda, an Islamic extremist organization that publicly executed criminals and outlawed education for women and girls.¹

Today, although progress has been made, and education is more accessible than under the Taliban, more than half of all Afghan girls still do not attend school. Underneath the surface of reported progress, problems persist, and official positions often conflict. According to Human Rights Watch, in March 2012, Afghanistan President Hamid Karzai publicly supported a statement by Afghanistan's Ulema Shura, a government-sponsored council of religious leaders, that said women are secondary to men, should not travel without a male chaperone, and should not mix with men in public or while working or studying. Karzai later explained his position by saying, "The clerics' council of Afghanistan did not put any limitations on women. It is the sharia law of all Muslims and all Afghans."²

Afghan women, especially those living in rural areas, still must live according to these strict rules of conduct. They have some of the worst literacy, poverty, and life expectancy rates in the world; many women and girls live in physically abusive environments and are forced into marriage—often at a young age and to a much older man. Women who travel outside their home or between villages and cities must be escorted by a male relative or husband at the risk of being labeled "immoral."

Several hundred children in Afghanistan live in prisons and juvenile detention facilities. While accurate statistics are not publicly available, Human Rights Watch estimates there are approximately 400 women and girls imprisoned in Afghanistan for "moral crimes." This is about half of all of the non-juvenile women in Afghanistan's prisons and virtually all teenage girls in its juvenile detention facilities.³

Eleven years after the fall of the Taliban, there have been significant improvements for Afghan women and girls. Official restrictions for access to education, work, and health care have ended, and millions of girls are attending school for the first time. Women hold government positions, win election to public office, and have become police officers and soldiers. A 2004 constitution guarantees women equal rights, and a 2009 law makes violence against women a crime. ■

NOTES

1. Jayshree Bajoria, "The Taliban in Afghanistan Background," Council on Foreign Relations, last updated October 26, 2011, accessed June 26, 2012, <http://tiny.cc/ijlahw>.
2. "I Had to Run Away Report," Human Rights Watch, published March 29, 2012, <http://tiny.cc/5glahw>.
3. World Report: Afghanistan, Human Rights Watch, <http://tiny.cc/ijlahw>.

SELECTED RESOURCES

Human Rights Watch is an independent organization dedicated to defending and protecting human rights around the world. Every year, they issue reports on the status of human rights in countries around the world, including Afghanistan. The organization works to prevent discrimination, uphold political freedom, protect people from inhumane conduct in wartime, and bring offenders to justice, <http://www.hrw.org/>.

Afghanistan: Moral Crimes, Human Rights Watch, published March 26, 2012, <http://tiny.cc/eflahw>.

Heather Barr, "Are Afghan Women Better Off After a Decade of War?" Human Rights Watch, published March 8, 2012, <http://www.hrw.org/news/2012/03/08/are-afghan-women-better-after-decade-war>.